The studies by various agencies including NABARD and RBI etc. have interalia indicated that:—

(a) The Cash Disbursement Scheme is less cumbersome, with less documentation and procedural delays.

(b) The demand of security by banks has reduced considerably in Cash Disbursement blocks.

(c) The beneficaries have purchased the quality assets in almost all the cases and have exercised then free dom of choice in the process of purchasing the. assets.

(d) The funds disbursed to the beneficiaries have been fully and properly utilised in most cases.

(e) The, level of satisfaction among the beneficiary is of a higher order.

(f) Better rapport exists between bankers and beneficiaries.

Further, the Reserve Bank of India has observed that the system has, by and large succeeded in achieving its objectives of eliminating the presence of intermediaries, arresting the trend of malpractices and leakages, narrowing the gap of operational risks, allowing larger freedom to beneficiaries in acquiring assets of their choice, reducing the administrative work load on the part of bank branches etc. Within the limitations of various kinds, the scheme has registered a fair degree of success. However, it also pointed out that the success of the scheme (CDS) depends upon interalia the location of the blocks, availability of market facility and necessary linkages.
